

The prophecies of Isaiah include words of judgement, words of comfort, and words of hope. In the opening chapters, much is said of the judgement that will come upon Judah and Jerusalem as a result of generations of unfaithfulness. In the closing chapters, much is said about the hope of the future; the nation of Israel, Judah, and Jerusalem being restored.

Sennacherib, king of the Assyrian world power will invade Judah and surround Jerusalem, but because King Hezekiah turns to God, Sennacherib will be killed and the Assyrians turned away. The judgement coming to Judah will be postponed. However, Isaiah will speak of Cyrus, king of Babylon, who will be used by God to execute His judgement on Judah.

The closing chapters are words of hope for the remnant; they will one day return and be restored. As we read these chapters, we also hear reference to the coming of Jesus and the hope of the Kingdom He will bring. Notice how many of Isaiah's words are echoed in the words of Revelation. The hope is real.
